

What Higher Education Experts are Saying

"[This is] a bold and innovative plan to transform Antioch College. Building on the historic strengths of the College, the plan combines an adaptation of Antioch's traditional co-op experience with the learning community model. This plan has the potential to deepen student learning while also providing students a practical experiential education."

--Ron Crutcher, Provost/Executive VP for Academic Affairs, Miami University

"The overall curricular design ... [is] both exciting and workable. It is based upon proven research-based principles about how to construct effective undergraduate learning settings, draws visibly on Antioch's own history and core values, and should command a ... steady market niche for recruiting new students."

-- Peter Ewell, Sr., National Center for Higher Education Management Systems

"[The plan] brings together some of the pedagogies that have the most appeal with students and faculty over the past decade – experiential learning, community-based teaching and learning, learning communities, undergraduate research, competency standards, and communications technologies. The Antioch proposal is the most comprehensive I have seen. I applaud the conception."

-- John O'Connor, consultant to the American Association for Higher Education

"[This] model will do a great deal toward improving retention, as learning communities have on other campuses."

-- Jo Ellen Parker, President, Great Lakes Colleges Association

"This [is] the centerpiece of a new Antioch, grounded in its traditions but rethought for the 21st Century."

-- Michael McPherson, President, Spencer Foundation
